

Metal blocks question

Two metal blocks sitting on a table, one hot and one cold, are placed in contact with one another. Over the next several minutes, the blocks become the same temperature as one another, and eventually the same temperature as the room.

What is your mental model that helps you explain why this happens?

